

WHAT'S NEW IN TUCSON

STILL SAVORY AFTER ALL THESE YEARS

What makes a legend most? For Tucson's El Charro Café, being a legend means using your family's 86-year-old recipe for sun-dried beef when preparing your signature Carne Seca Plate. For this and other recipes that have stood the test of time, El Charro Café has been named a legend by Gourmet Magazine. In its October issue, the magazine lists El Charro as one of 20 "American Restaurant Legends" that have been going strong since before Gourmet debuted in 1941. El Charro, established in 1922, describes itself the oldest restaurant in Arizona under continuous family ownership. Its five Tucson locations include the original café downtown, which was profiled in Gourmet. See www.elcharrocafe.com.

MODERN UPGRADES FOR HISTORICAL RESORTS

Two historical hotels in Tucson have completed improvement projects. The Westward Look Resort and Hacienda del Sol Guest Ranch Resort—located about five miles apart in Tucson's northern foothills—began as private homesteads that made the most of their Santa Catalina Mountain and Tucson valley views. Today, after extensive upgrades, the Westward Look's acclaimed meeting rooms offer the most innovative technology, implemented as part of a $10 million resort renovation. Hacienda del Sol's award-winning restaurant, The Grill, added an Exhibition Kitchen lounge area with a new seating arrangement that provide diners with views of the kitchen staff at work. FREE BIKE VALET AT STREET FAIR

A free Bike Valet will be available to cyclists pedaling to the Fourth Avenue Winter Street Fair, December 12-14. For the third year, the Fourth Avenue Merchants Association (FAMA) will provide a secure, gated area for bicycles near the Food Court at Seventh Street and Fourth Avenue. Ordinary Bikes, BICAS (Bicycle Inter Community Action and Salvage), and the City of Tucson Bike to Work program will monitor the area and offer information about bicycling as transportation. The Winter Street Fair usually attracts 300,000 to 350,000 people. While there is plenty of street and lot parking, including several bus routes and a free shuttle from the Pennington Street Garage in downtown Tucson to the fair, FAMA says the Bike Valet demonstrates Fourth Avenue's support of "green" transportation. More information is available from FAMA at www.fourthavenue.org/fairs.

GIANT BRONZE SCULPTURES DOWNTOWN

Sculptor Curt Brill says great public art brings a sense of intimacy into public settings. The artist has an opportunity to test this theory at his latest exhibition, at Jacome Plaza in downtown Tucson, now through December 31. The exhibition features a series of monumental – some more than twice life-sized – figurative, bronze sculptures that Brill created using a complicated lost-wax process. This public art display is a joint exhibition of The Gallery at 6th & 6th and the City of Tucson Parks and Recreation department. For more information, contact Lauren Rabb at The Gallery at 6th & 6th, at 520-903-0650. See pictures of the sculptures at the Downtown Tucson Partnership Web site, www.downtowntucson.org.

COOL WEATHER & FRESH PRODUCE

Autumn is perfect for a day trip to Willcox, 80 miles east of Tucson. Along with cooler weather comes an abundance of produce. At Apple Annie's Produce and Pumpkins, this is the season for sweet corn, melons, green beans, squash, field tomatoes, chiles, peppers, and more. Produce is available already picked, or you can pick your own right from the vine. Apple Annie's bakery, fudge kitchen, and gift shop are also open daily. Autumn's mild days also are luring Tucson shoppers to outdoor farmers' markets. One of the newest markets serves the campus crowd at University of Arizona's Main Gate Square, now through April. For area farmers' markets, see www.VisitTucson.org/visitor/culinary/farmers-markets. For Willcox-area u-pick-it farms, visit www.willcoxchamber.com/upick.asp.

ADOBE CHAPEL SERVES NEW COMMUNITY

Tucson's Old Fort Lowell Neighborhood is celebrating the revitalization of the San Pedro Chapel after an intensive, four-year restoration effort. The 1,370-square-foot adobe chapel, built in 1932, originally served the Mexican community in the area of "El Fuerte," or the Fort Lowell military post. The chapel served as the parish church and community center until 1948. It became the first City of Tucson Landmark in 1982; in 1993 it was placed on both the State and National Registers of Historic Places. Today, the charming landmark may be rented for weddings, parties, and other gatherings. Call the Old Fort Lowell Neighborhood Association, 520-318-0219.
